The party was divided, one faction being guided and controlled by the federal officials, and the other by our esteemed morning contemporary. Nominally it was a fight as to whether Grant or anti-Grant delegates should be sent to the Cincinnati convention; in point of fact it was a struggle for dictatorial supremacy between the F. O. H's. who desired to be conservative and decent, and our red-headed newspaper friend, who, by nature, was required to be exactly the opposite. The anti-Grants and the organ were victorious, and the officials went to the wall, taking with them, however, a considerable following.
